Some men think that religion is a mere ecstatic experience, like a tune rarely played upon some faculty, living only while it is being performed and then dying in silence. And, indeed, many men carry their religion as a church carries its bell-high up in the belfry, to ring out on sacred days, to strike for funerals, or to chime for weddings. All the rest of the time it hangs high above reachvoiceless, silent, dead. Religion is not the specialty of any one feeling, but the mood and harmony of the whole of them. It is the whole soul marching heavenward to the music of joy and love, with well ranked faculties, every one of them beating time and keep-
